

THE RADAR NOW!

ART ON WHEELS: LACE Gallery's roving karaoke ice truck.

HIGH ROLLERS

True, nobody walks in L.A. But that doesn't mean we like to drive, either. Now, thanks to a few savvy businesses, you can hit the nightlife, shopping and art scenes by having them come to you. The Dolce Group (Les Deux, Geisha House) recently debuted the Short Bus (www.theshortbusla.com)—a mini school bus revamped with a giant hi-def TV, state-of-the-art sound system and full bar—to haul hip posses all over town. Then there's LACE Gallery's Karaoke Ice mobile (www.karaokeice.com), a former ice cream truck-turned-traveling karaoke stage featuring a playlist of pop tunes like Outkast's "Hey Ya." All month long, it'll be roving L.A. neighborhoods with free ice pops for anyone who steps up and sings. Finally, Hitch Couture (www.hitchcouture.com), a boutique stashed inside a shiny Airstream, will motor to your doorstep for a little retail therapy. The trailer, complete with fitting room, brims with up-and-coming lines like Cornfed and owner Jeanne Landau's own I Hate Labels collection. If things keep rollin' this way, road rage could soon be left in the dust. —Lyndsey Saul
